

NATCA's Western Pacific Region is Proud to Host the 20th Biennial Convention!

NATCA's Western Pacific Region (NWP) is proud to host the 20th Biennial Convention, taking place May 9–11, 2025, in San Francisco.

Here are a few facts about the region:

- NWP spans California, Nevada, Arizona, Hawaii, Guam, and American Samoa, covering more than 6,000 miles across the Pacific.
- Controllers here often work the first and last shifts in the National Airspace System due to the region's time zone reach.
- Southern California TRACON (SCT), located in NWP, is one of the busiest TRACON facilities in the world.
- NWP facilities regularly manage wildfires, earthquakes, and volcanic ash with expert coordination and safety.

- Towers at Los Angeles (LAX), San Diego (SAN), San Francisco (SFO), and Honolulu (HNL) offer some of the most complex and scenic air traffic environments in the country.
- This region helped launch U.S. commercial aviation, with routes from Los Angeles and San Francisco to Asia and the Pacific as early as 1927.

Convention History: Celebrating 19 Conventions Together

As we get ready to gather in San Francisco for NATCA's 20th Biennial Convention, May 9–11, 2025, we're reflecting on how far we've come.

Since our founding Convention in Chicago in 1986, delegates from across our 10 regions have met every two years to shape the future of our Union by amending the Constitution and setting policy.

We've now held 19 Conventions in 15 states. Learn more about our history on the National Historical Committee's page.

Honoring the Moms and Mom Figures of NATCA

As we get ready to celebrate Mother's Day, NATCA is shining a light on the incredible members who are moms, mentors, and all who show up with love while helping keep the National Airspace System safe with the same dedication. If you know a NATCA member who fills that role, we'd love to feature them in our special Mother's Day photo album! Send your photos to publicaffairs@natca.org by April 30, and include the name and facility of the member you're celebrating.
